Ian Ohnstad gains prestigious RASE award for distinguished achievement in the agricultural industry

Ian Ohnstad, Milking Technology Specialist with The Dairy Group was recently awarded an Associate of The Royal Agricultural Society at a reception hosted by Baroness Byford at the House of Lords.

The award presented by Rosemary Carne, Chairman of Council for the Royal Agricultural Societies, was in recognition of his distinguished achievement in the agricultural industry.

Ian has worked as a dairy specialist for more than 28 years, working both within the UK and overseas. He is the Chairman of the British Mastitis Conference and a Board member of the National Mastitis Council in the USA as well as a Director of The Dairy Group. In addition to his work with dairy farmers, this award also recognises his contribution to research and development in the dairy sector and his ongoing commitment to knowledge transfer and training.

The Royal Agricultural Society of England is an independent charity dedicated to the application of science and technology to optimise agriculture and food resources to ensure a secure global future.

As part of its new agenda 'to seek out and communicate innovations of real commercial value to farmers', The Royal Agricultural Society of England in partnership with 15 other Agricultural Societies has established the 'Innovation for Agriculture' initiative.
